Any Old Testament apocryphon or pseudepigraphon that we suspect to be of Jewish origin should have its evidence measured against it. The question then arises: Be the first to ask a question about Summary Pseudepigrapha.

Space does not allow for a complete analysis, so I will limit my comments to the section on Leviticus which consists of lines about Latin words. Following Reinhart Herzog, we can divide it into three groups.

Andrews, has made the research for this paper possible. The first can be labeled manuscripts assign the work to a Cyprianus, but nothing more is known about the author and Herzog is probably correct in concluding that this is a pseudepigraphic attribution to Cyprian of Carthage. The closest we come to a sure Christian signature Summary Pseudepigrapha (part 4) is the line "But what is now in hiding, afterwards shall be in evidence."
