The basic idea of narrative inquiry is that people "experience their lives and identities in narrative form. It is in the narrative weaving where lies the key to understanding the relationship between identity and language learning" p. According to Kanno, the study is significant and unique in that three characteristics of it differentiate it from other studies on bilingual and bicultural identities. International Journal of Progressive Education, 11 Such a longitudinal study with a focus on in-depth individual narratives of bicultural and bilingual identity brings depth to our conception of language learning and use as a process of continual transformation.
