A clever look at death via the Irish and almost everywhere. Toolis is angry about this cold-shouldering of death. Would you like to tell us about a lower price? Kevin Toolis has experienced a lot. The wind scatters one year's leaves down on to the earth, but when spring comes into My Father's Wake luxuriant forest produces other leaves; so it is with the generations of men, one grows as the other comes to end. Challenging the 'Western Death Machine,' Toolis describes his experiences with human mortality throughout his life, including his stint in a lung-disease ward, his time spent as a correspondent in the Middle East and Northern Ireland, and the eponymous death of his father. I wholeheartedly agree with the premise of this book regarding societal treatment. Could I offer in return for this death?
