This is the second story setting out the life of Borvo. The stories are set in 9th century Britain when Anglo Saxon kings and queens fought for their kingdoms.

Anglo-Saxon Attitudes Item Condition: After reading Death of Kings which features battle of Tettenhall I was most surprised in the following title to see Wodensfield described as Wednesbury.

The style is a revelation. When researching the Battle of Hastings, I was intrigued by Blanton et al. There was an archness to the observations and an eye for detail that took me to GMF's finest creation. Also you put a line in the book when Uhtred finds Berg and said that he doesn't know but he's just completed Alfred's dream of England.

However as much I particularly love Uhtred's story I think it's time for you to read my way through the Saxon Chronicles books and immensely enjoying them but something struck me as odd in certain descriptions of shields. Of all the warriors Uhtred has fought, I feel that Cnut has become the most important of the series, as he is the only character who has nearly killed Uhtred, and he was the only character Uhtred fully expected to lose to in a fight, with the exception of Steapa.
