Despite improvements to the demographic make up of the nursing workforce in recent decades, the workforce remains predominantly white, female, and middle aged. The Commonwealth Fund and the Kaiser Family Foundation, for instance, have no nurses on their boards, although they do have physicians. For example, the group identified poor reimbursement of home health care as a serious obstacle, and the hospital established ties to agencies able to tackle the reimbursement issue.

This article originally appeared on the PEX Network the global source for nurses. Nurses should have a voice in health policy decision making, as well as being engaged in implementation efforts related to health care reform. A review of the literature on physical restraint.

Problems arise every day that do not have easy or singular solutions. Much of the focus of attention was on achieving quality care and cost reductions.
